

Footpath across Hatch Farm watermeadows and aqueduct, Stanford

The path leads off the main road (B3004) near to the Robin Hood houses, indicated by a River Wey Trust information board (Pics 1 & 2). The board shows how the watermeadow would have been used, and the function of the aqueduct.

Occasionally the path has been known to get a little overgrown, but it is shown here (Pic 3) when clear.

After turning sharp left it arrives at a kissing gate (Pic 4), then turns sharp right to cross the watermeadow (Pics 5 & 6).

Follow the track to arrive at the aqueduct (Pic 7). This was restored by the River Wey Trust in 2005, and is a good place to stop for a while and watch the river flowing underneath.

The path ends with another kissing gate (Pic 8) giving access to FP33.

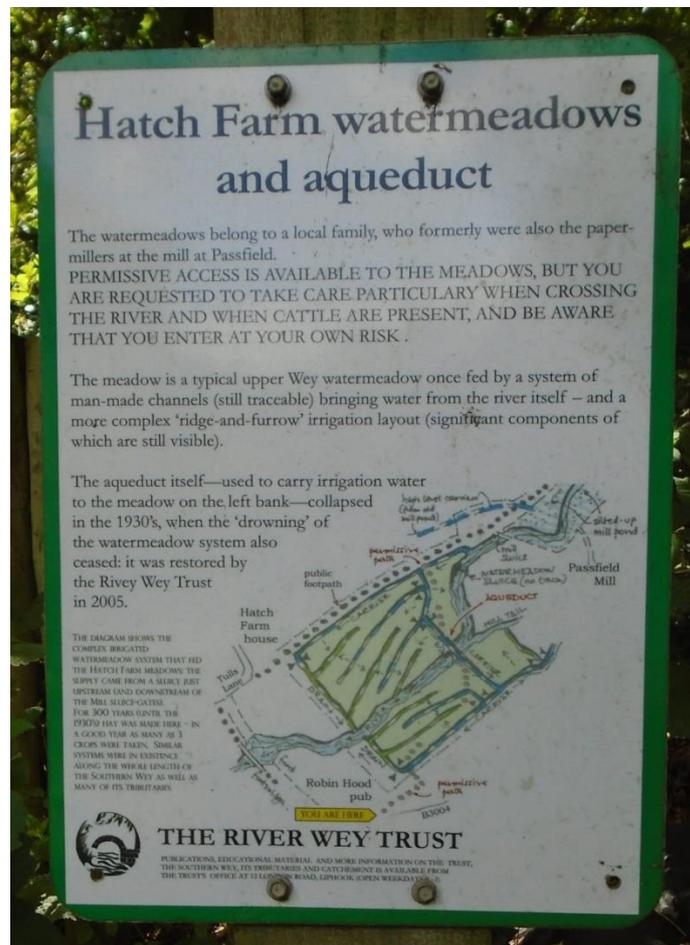

Note: This path is maintained by the River Wey Trust. It makes for a pleasant, short circular walk with FP33 and the footbridge over the river by Stanford ford.

See BW47 for another aqueduct used to cross the River Wey.

Pic 1:

Pic 2:

Pic 3:

Pic 4:

Pic 5:

Pic 6:

Pic 7: Over the aqueduct

Pic 8: Exit to FP33

